Healthy Broccoli Salad

by Yolanda Magaña

1 head fresh broccoli, cut into bite size pieces

¼ cup red onion, chopped (use more if you really like onion)

½ to 1 cup dried cranberries or raisins (I don't use raisins because my family is not that fond of them. Your preference.)

The original recipe called for one other item but I tweaked the recipe and made it my own style. Again, you can make it according to your food preferences. The omitted item is:

10 slices crisply cooked/chopped bacon or REAL brand imitation bacon bits

I like to par-boil my broccoli so that it gets that dark green color to it. I boil it for about 1 minute or just long enough for it to look dark green. Remove immediately after your cooking time, drain water, rinse in cold water and, let it completely cool at room temperature. Makes for better presentation when it's dark green but you can use it raw and that would be fine. It's your choice.

Dressing:

3 tablespoons white wine vinegar

2 tablespoons white sugar

1 cup mayonnaise

½ to 1 cup sunflower seeds

Prepare dressing first so it has time to sit. I normally add the dressing the night before so the ingredients have time to absorb for a better taste.

Cut up the broccoli. I only use the heads because again, my family is a little picky and they don't always like the stem part (I DO). Mix with your chopped red onion, add your cranberries (or raisins) and sunflower seeds.

Still in your dressing and mix it all up. That's it, you're done! Refrigerate overnight. When ready to serve, mix it up and serve. Sometimes I make another batch of the dressing because it tends to soak up in the salad by morning. Your, call, use your judgment.
